TEXTBOOK POLICY

Students enrolled at the RSA are responsible for obtaining the required textbooks and learning materials for their courses. For all Talmudic courses, students are required to purchase and maintain their own Gemaras and any other required course texts as specified by the instructor.

RSA does not designate or require the use of any particular vendor, retailer, publisher, or source for the purchase of required texts. Students may obtain their materials through bookstores, online retailers, used-book sellers, private sales, or other lawful sources, provided that the materials are complete and suitable for classroom use.

RSA maintains a collection of Gemaras and other scholarly resources to support student learning and research. Library materials are intended primarily for reference, supplemental study, and short-term use. While students may consult library copies as needed, library materials are not intended to replace personally owned required textbooks or to serve as a student's primary course texts throughout the academic term.
